

The Kimberley Ports Authority (KPA) recognises the importance of environmental protection and is committed to acting in an environmentally responsible and sustainable manner. Under the Port Authorities Act 1999, KPA has a duty to protect the port environment and minimise impacts of port activities on that environment.

To achieve KPA's environmental commitment, KPA has identified the following key principles:

- complying with all laws, regulations and standards with respect to the environment, applying responsible standards where legislation and regulations do not exist and requiring similar performance by all parties active at KPA ports;
- continually improving environmental performance and minimising environmental impacts across operations, both land and marine side;
- respecting ecological, heritage and biodiversity values, and
- being open, accurate and transparent on our environmental performance.

The enabling actions to ensure these principles are met at KPA ports are:

- incorporating environmental considerations into our strategic planning processes, including climate change adaptation and reducing carbon emissions;
- ensuring, where possible, that all business is conducted by employees, contractors and port users to contribute towards KPA's environmental goals for sustainable development;
- ensuring that employees, contractors and port users are aware of their responsibilities relating to the environment and comply with port procedures where applicable;
- working with tenants to identify and manage environmental aspects associated with their operations;
- implement appropriate environmental monitoring programs to assist in minimising environmental impact from port activities;
- incorporating pollution prevention practices into our operating procedures and processes, and
- continuing to implement, review and maintain the KPA Environmental Management Systems.

This policy applies to KPA's Board, direct employees, and port managers, including consultants or contractors.
